Becoming a successful manager the development of new skills and abilities: delegation, team building, supervision, change management and talent management, just to name a few. Becoming a successful manager also requires embracing new perspectives. For example: what does it mean to become accountable not just for your own performance, but for others? How do you manage the need to expand the range of your personal and professional "presence"? In this two-day program, participants will use a Gestalt approach to learn about and enhance their approach, presence and skills as a manager.

"GISC is a high caliber community of teachers and participants – an excellent resource for anyone wanting to grow!"
