This program focuses on individual personality theory and assessment and its application to coaching. The practice of coaching requires the ability to understand quickly the personality dynamics of the person being coached; yet training in coaching does not generally provide in-depth education in assessing and working with these issues.

This intensive workshop will focus on understanding and working with the characteristics and manifestations of narcissism, perfectionism and control, anger and conflict management, depression, and issues of self-esteem. Participants will explore how to coach each differently and how to know when referral is needed. Participants will have the opportunity to explore cases from their own practices in relation to personality dynamics and theory.

“Sessions at the Center continue to help me gain self-awareness and develop new abilities and confidence. It's a refreshing and fun learning environment.”
